Chapter 1 by DiamondsApples

It was big, huge. Bigger than I had ever seen. A slithery beast that had no wings, but looked dangerous enough to kill someone. With pure, white scales, like that of the snow up north, shining in the splash of sunlight it was gifted with. Whether it be a female or a male, one could not be sure. It looked like a gigantic snake, bigger than four African, male elephants combined.

It's tail ended in a spike-like fashion, coloured a baby-blue. It's sharp spines stuck out of its tough, thick skin, and the fins of his head made him look like a monster of the sea, a predator better left alone than disturbed. With vicious, black eyes, one was to have nightmares from the fearful sight of this... 'Thing'. I had never seen it before, and it looked like it belonged to the fantasy books I had never read. I knew what it was, but instead, I gave it another name, a name that I would always remember from this day onward...
